EDITOR'S STORY: Creating an RPG with an Old System INTRODUCTION In the early 2000s, one of the largest online games in Japan was an RPG based on Japanese mythology titled _Silk Road Online_ (丝绸之路). This game had 9 million users, making it one of the most popular online games in Japan at that time. In 2004, this game was released on Steam, and it is no longer possible to access. It is said that this game was named _Silk Road Online_ (丝绸之路) so that it would not be mistaken for _Silk Road Online_ (丝绸之路) _one of the most popular online games in Japan at that time_. I was working on a _Silk Road Online_ RPG myself, and I am still haunted by the pursuit for a Holy Grail. The game did not get on well with the users. There were times when the number of players was as low as 20 players, and the state of the game deteriorated further and further. The game was a resounding flop. At some point, the game management company shut down the game. I didn't find out until afterward that the game had even broken the Japanese server. It wasn't the first time that this had happened, and the management company was like many other companies that seemed to be full of hot air. "I'm so glad that you're back!" Those were the words of the management company after they offered me my job back and apologized for their mistakes. "What is this?" I was in a state of shock. I did not want to do the same thing again, and I wanted to work for a company that was still in operation. Two years went by, but as I thought about how I would make a _Silk Road Online_ a second time, I once again began dreaming of the "holy grail" of RPGs. At that time, I met Yusuke Murata, a game designer at a game company who played _Silk Road Online_ with me. I spoke about the game and he expressed his desire to develop it into something more faithful to the original game. At that point, Yusuke had just started working at a new game company called "Delve Co., Ltd." FALLEN WORLD: FURUHAN FOUNDERS DELVE CO bff6bb2d33

The hematological parameters of Otophyrne pectinata male and female. There was no significant difference among the adult males of O. pectinata and their blood constituents ((Table 1){#t02}{ref-type="table"}). No significant differences were found when comparing the same sex of the two species in O. pectinata and O. scalaris. The absence of significant differences is not surprising as these two closely-related species have been maintained in captivity in the same facility. The female of O. pectinata showed significant differences in PCV, MCV, TEC, MCH and MCHC when compared with the male of O. pectinata and O. scalaris ((Table 1){#t02}{ref-type="table"}). The laboratory values of the blood constituents of the female of O. pectinata were within normal range for animals in captivity (@bibr07]). The female O. pectinata has moderate anemia due to the viviparity and is in good health. This is the first study on the blood constituents of O. pectinata in captivity. The relatively high PCV values have been recorded in O. pectinata ((Table 1){#t01}{ref-type="table"}) but within normal range. The MCHC values are higher in O. pectinata than the other two species. On the other hand, the MCH values of O. pectinata and *
