Monitoring effects of antipsychotic drugs on corticogenesis in the living brain. Corticogenesis is the generation of new neurons and glial cells from the neurogenic stem cells or from neuronal stem cells in the adult brain. The functional consequences of these new cells might be studied using MRI, and it has become possible to investigate them in living subjects as a result of the advent of manganese-enhanced MRI (MEMRI). To investigate newly generated glial cells and particularly to monitor the effects of antipsychotic drugs on the migration of new cells from stem cells located in the subventricular zone (SVZ) to the olfactory bulb (OB) in response to various stimuli, we examined the effects of antipsychotic drugs. The antipsychotic drugs examined are olanzapine, haloperidol, quetiapine, clozapine, risperidone and ziprasidone, and as an external stimulus a methylphenidate challenge was performed. We found that antipsychotic drugs both decreased the migration of new cells and increased the generation of new cells in the OB, and therefore we can state that antipsychotic drugs decreased glial cells generated in the OB and increased glial cells generated in the SVZ. We will discuss the characteristics of antipsychotic drugs and their effects on glial cells. In addition, we intend to discuss the possibility that antipsychotic drugs might affect cognition in humans. [Sex-steroid hormones and the pathogenesis of idiopathic dilatation of the arterial parietal intima in children]. Endocrine systems play a prominent role in the genesis and function of the arterial wall. It is shown that luteinizing hormone and prolactin may be important for the genesis of arteriosclerosis through vasoconstriction of vascular smooth muscles. In children affected by idiopathic dilation of the arterial parietal intima the prolactin level is significantly raised. Q: Pandas- Sum and Resample over stranges I'm trying to Resample a Pandas DataFrame from MinSec to Hour to get the sum of the values and that sum should be resampled between each of the intraday peaks values. So, I've done the following `s = pd.DataFrame(.....) s['time_gr'] = pd.to_datetime(s['time_gr']) s['time_in_sec'] = pd.to_timedelta(s['time_in_sec']) s['a'] = s['a'].resample('1Min').sum()` But that gives me the sum of all the values,
