John Kelly, who served as White House chief of staff under Trump before moving on to the Department of Homeland Security, said there were no circumstances under which the gunman should be allowed back into the country. "We need to make sure that if somebody is going to come here and do us harm that if it doesn't work out that they are removed from the population either a country like Australia, a country like Nauru, a country like Papua New Guinea, all the countries that take people from those nations — not American citizens they need to be in prison for a very long time," Kelly told the "Fox News Sunday" program. The gunman, who was born in New York, had been living in the Dallas area, though Kelly said authorities knew little else about him. He was killed by a police officer after being wounded in a shootout at a strip mall in suburban Dallas. The shooter's brother had said he was distraught over the death of his son, who had been killed in Afghanistan, and had been planning a revenge attack. Kelly said there was "no way" that the mother of the gunman, who is said to be in her 60s, should ever be allowed back into the country. "One of the things that I just think is unacceptable is that somebody can come in, be here, raise their children here and in many cases be on welfare and most of the time essentially be on government assistance and if something happens — if they're radicalized — then we're doing something wrong if we let them stay here." The gunman's second wife was a permanent resident of the U.S., and Kelly said she should also be barred from returning. The Trump administration has vowed to toughen immigration laws, pointing to a number of cases of people from countries deemed to be of significant security concern who were allowed to stay in the U.S. A number of those suspects have been arrested, though Kelly did not say any had been convicted. A reported 11 people have been arrested under the
