Semiconductor memory devices, such as dynamic random access memories (DRAMs), generally include a memory cell array region and a circuit region. The circuit region includes a plurality of circuit blocks, and a circuit for interconnecting the plurality of circuit blocks to one another. In the memory cell array region, each circuit block is often controlled by a corresponding circuit block of the circuit region. Thus, the number of terminals of an external voltage source connected to a semiconductor memory device is reduced. FIG. 1 illustrates a prior art semiconductor memory device 100 having an external voltage generator 110 generating a power voltage Vdd and a bus driver
