In previous versions of Adobe Photoshop, the best way to manage photo files, editors, and collections was in the Bridge window. Although it provides a convenient place for viewing and organizing images, it didn't offer any great workflow tools. In Lightroom 5, it's for the first time we can run our workflow in the large canvas of Photoshop thanks to a new project, "Previews" tab. This tab allows you to preview your images while working in Photoshop. This preview image can be a favorite, saved in Step 5, or a smart preview from a shared pool. This feature is not available in Photoshop Elements. Last year, I reviewed the initial release of Lightroom 5 and mentioned that the Lightroom team and I wanted to see you using the new features to improve your workflow. We look forward to your feedback as we continue to refine the preview features with each release. Today's new features will help you get work done quickly and easily. We've also streamlined some existing features, and taken advantage of new ones. We've made it easier to manage your Lightroom workflow from start to finish. And, we're making it blazingly fast! As you can see from the screenshot, using Lightroom 5's new Previews feature allows you to preview your files live as you edit them in Photoshop. It is also possible to share and create smart previews (such as star ratings, color swatches, and text annotations) using Photoshop's smart object feature. We've also taken advantage of the new Photoshop CS6-compatible specs for SSO previews. We're discovering that the changes made this version are improving performance and making it faster to use the program. But, the program is still very powerful and our focus this year is to improve all aspects of it.
