The new access to reality scopes, a new development tool, is a big deal. Photoshop's layer options in Version panels are also much more flexible than ever. You can add layers and assign them to groups that also have their own tools. This will make your editing workflow a whole lot easier. You can add live perspectives, 3D models, and many other effects to your still imagery, and all of these effects, layers, and perspectives are easily accessible from one of the layers you create in your project (no matter what size it is). As a result, there is no need to explore the various options in countless submenus if you're not sure about one. You can preview the full array of options in the view controls in the toolbox. Like anything but a negative change, MS Office Excel has been expanded in Lightroom 5. If you use the new range marker feature in the Develop module, you'll re-live the lost experience of using the main user interface. The new bar appears at the top or bottom of the image – depending on which way you're scrolling. You'll also find an occasionally visible frame around the image. The bar doesn't seem to interfere with the image, but it does make it a bit hard to see what's going on in the image. A sign of the times, as the Microsoft Word behemoth has been expanding its presence, too: the "Reading Order" panel now displays the image with stripes to indicate the visible, zipped image. The panel also provides easier access to the XMP sidecar tag data at the top of the image. The Reading Order panel is only available in Edit mode; the main interface isn't affected.

"We're focused and committed to delivering the best of Photoshop to our customers. Photoshop is a universal tool, and that is why we have invested in the next wave of innovation with our world-class design and technology teams." said Alex Konrad, Chief Product Officer, Adobe. "With every major release, we look for new ways to empower our customers to unleash their creativity, and we are proud to bring new and exciting future of work-from-home experiences to our customers, with the addition of Share for Review and improved display of shared content to the web. It's been a great year for Adobe with some of the most significant browser upgrades in years, and now we're bringing this new browser-only experience to iOS and Android users around the world, which is also why we are introducing the Android app for the first time starting with Version 17."

"We worked hard to set up all of these sessions at MAX," said Alex Loukides, Senior Director, Business Development, Adobe. "What is most exciting is that all of this is enabled by only the enhancements to core Photoshop and Gear VR, which is arguably as transformative to content creation as the tools themselves. We are excited to share this powerful new experience with the community at MAX."

"Adobe products reinvent how the world makes, interacts and connects on a daily basis, no matter how any of us spends our time. The creative professionals use them to create amazing content, manage projects and now on mobile, collaborate across the globe, making them the largest and most advanced tools for the web-team," added Louis Monier, Chief Product Officer, Adobe. "The new web app for the desktop and iPad, along with new capabilities in the mobile apps, are the largest and most important updates in years, and we look forward to the best global creative week of the year every year as we watch the most watched creative conference on the planet."
