The Tarnished Kingdom lies in a land full of flowers and grass, where two factions rule over their respective realms. It is a land in which the Great Mother, Erelia, rules supreme. One of her subjects, the Elder, is a man who seeks to unite the nations under his rule. Amidst the battlefield of this struggle for power lies the Tarnished Kingdom, which has fallen to ruin. The people of this land are weary of the fighting, and yearn for peace. Many among them turn to the Elder for guidance and protection. But the Elder is a greedy man and, while encouraging his people to turn to him, he corrupts the land by rebuilding the riches of the Tarnished Kingdom. Soon, the war he promised shall erupt. The Tarnished Kingdom will be ripped apart. And after that, the Elder shall set off for the lands of the Far North, where the Great Mother lies waiting for him. © 2011-2018, Silicon Studio Inc. By the time the Charlotte Hornets had convened for their first preseason game, two players — Gerald Henderson and Justin Jackson — were already gone for the season. Those losses have given the team two open roster spots available. On Monday afternoon, the team announced via Twitter that they've signed Jason Calliste to their 10-man roster. The 6-foot-5 guard averaged 10.5 points, 4.8 assists, and 3.3 rebounds across three games with the New Orleans Pelicans last season. Harrison eventually signed with the Austin Spurs, while Calliste didn't get picked up by any other NBA team. Calliste played for Albany's fourth-division team. Calliste has always possessed the length and athleticism to be a valuable role player. If he can be effective as a sparkplug off the bench, he has the potential to be a late-round steal for Charlotte. The Hornets open up their regular season on Oct. 17 against the New York Knicks.

'False innocence' Articles Yet another study demonstrates that, in the future, global warming will cause the oceans to become acidified, and that higher levels of acidification will damage the shells of sea creatures. A research team led by University of California, San Diego, postdoctoral researcher Wendy Leung measured the amount of carbon dioxide in various seas in 2004. The concentration of carbon dioxide in the ocean rose substantially from the 1980s to the early 2000s. The researchers then found that the amount of carbonic acid, a by-product of carbon dioxide dissolving in the oceans, increased by about 5 percent in the North Atlantic, the East Pacific, and in the North Indian Ocean. They also confirmed that in the North Atlantic, carbon dioxide concentrations in the surface waters exceeded those in the ocean at depths greater than two hundred metres. Acidified oceans are particularly harmful to sea creatures because they lower the pH of the water. This lowers the level at which certain metals become soluble and makes them unavailable to shell-forming organisms. In the study, first published in Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences on May 2, 2004, marine shell-creatures were the most sensitive to the effects of carbonic acid pollution, especially in areas where temperatures warm, but the most important threat was acidification in the Arctic, Leung said. Other studies have concluded that as the oceans warm, they are losing their ability to absorb carbon dioxide. The oceans are becoming less able to buffer the Earth's climate from carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases because they are becoming more acidic and less alkaline. According to Leung, this process is occurring at a faster rate at greater depths. The team's study, however, looked at the level of carbon dioxide at the surface. When the oceans become too acidic, the shell-creatures will get weaker and be more susceptible

The mechanism of side effects caused by Cisplatin therapy is largely unknown. The purpose of this study was to determine the relation between dendritic spine density, morphology and neurochemistry of hippocampus neurons and Cisplatin. The dendritic spines density was evaluated on the brains of 25 Wistar rats. The animals were divided into 3 groups: control group (n=10), treated group (n=10) and Cisplatin treated group (n=5). Groups were distinguished according to the different time of Cisplatin administration. The volume of cells in hippocampal formation, Nissl and Golgi-Cox staining were significantly different between control and Cisplatin-treated groups. In the treated group hippocampus cells were morphologically
