Decent web browser, but really don't recommend it! After performing a quick Google search for a comprehensive list of web browsers, I found that the most respected web browsers have a list that contains, as its first place, "Google Chrome." It appears that the above free browser has won the majority of popularity among users who use the Internet. Chrome is a very simple browser with a light user interface. It can play flash movies, it has an integrated Web browser, and it can even open up PDF files directly. Chrome is also reliable and doesn't often crash like other programs. It can be downloaded by clicking this link: One of the biggest disadvantages of using Google Chrome is that it cannot be customized, which is why I wrote this review. For a more user-friendly browser, I recommend using Internet Explorer or Firefox. Google Chrome is far behind the competition when it comes to the overall functionality of a web browser. The same can be said for all browsers; if you decide to use any other program, be aware that it cannot be used on the Windows XP operating system. However, there is a new browser that has recently been added to the market: Windows Phone 8. Google's new browser is set to be released for the Windows Phone 8 operating system in 2014. I've just started using it and so far I've not noticed any major changes between the new browser and Google Chrome. -Frustrated with other web browsers?
