The program will be based at the Harvard School of Public Health (HSPH) and combine elements of HSPH's longstanding strengths in public health economics with the methods and tools of demography. The training program will be offered for the first time in the fall of 1999. The interdisciplinary course work for the program will be supplemented with tutorials in demography, comparative economic analysis, and methods in social and health economics. The primary goal is to build a critical mass of behavioral, economic, and demographic scholars with the technical tools to make important contributions to the field of population research. Each year of the program will feature a symposium. Participants will be selected from a group of between seven and ten candidates. Courses will be offered at the K-12 level to provide the candidates with the tools to make
