grow, grow, grow. [and so on.]" . I'd like to thank you for this invitation to speak to you today. I am honoured to join you in honour of Professor Emeritus Richard K. I like to start by commending Professor Emeritus Richard K. for being the inaugural recipient of the Loyola and Marymount University Department of Business and Economics Regent Wright C.E. Memorial Award. I think of Richard when he delivered the important remarks to us earlier this morning. This morning, he began his remarks by saying: "I have now been retired for nearly a year, yet I have never been happier to be retired." It is our pleasure to honour Dr. K. today. He has devoted more than half a century to the entertainment industry and helped in the creation and growth of live performance, both in California and internationally. He has also been a role model for business students and professionals in the entertainment industry at Loyola Marymount University and the entire Los Angeles area. Dr. K. joins a distinguished list of former faculty members from Loyola Marymount who have been honored this year. Back in March, we bestowed honorary degrees on Bruce Daniel, Richard Lewis, and Nashote Phillips. Professor Emeritus Richard K. now joins them as the recipient of the Loyola and Marymount University Department of Business and Economics Regent Wright C.E. Memorial Award. Professor Emeritus Richard K. has played a vital role in the entertainment industry since the 1970s and has been an influential figure in the live performance industry throughout the world. His core business is The Frost Wall Company, a manufacturer of stereophonic sound systems and wall surrounds for videogame and theatrical productions. Richard K. founded Frost Wall Companies in 1971. At that time, his company manufactured electronic surround sound systems for producers like Elton John, The Rolling Stones, and Monty Python. From this point on, Frost Wall enjoyed increased demand for its equipment and the company grew in size and scope. In the 1980s, Frost Wall enjoyed a period of growth under the leadership of Richard K. When the mainstream video game industry started to decline, Frost Wall was well prepared to take advantage of the new game consoles like
