Unlock this Content In many job roles and/or work environments, we will be required to fill out application forms or answer survey questions or participate in activities that may be subjective. The DCP is one way to ensure that the data collected will be reliable and accurate. How does the Direct Certification Program (DCP) work? Through the direct certification program, we give you a certification that verifies your training. By doing this, we are verifying that the training you received is genuinely what you think it is. However, the reliability of the information is not guaranteed. Our direct certification procedure is a two-phase process: You must pass a test (phase 1) to demonstrate your qualifications. To qualify for a direct certification number, you must provide a confirmation letter (phase 2). During phase 1, the certification organization will conduct a validity test that checks your knowledge of the knowledge and skills required for the job. For this test, you will be asked to complete a sample application form. During phase 2, the certification organization will verify the accuracy of the information provided. Based on the information you provide, the organization will provide

It allows you to edit and open and view many types of files.Q: Why are the first three coordinates of a array constant? I have been seeing on some place that the first three values of the array are constant values, say. For example, struct S{int x, y;}; S d[3]; const int P  $1[3] = \{1,2,3\}$ ; This makes no sense because those first three are also the first three values of the array d which have just been initialised with data. A: The idea behind it is for these initialization statements to be optimized by the compiler; rather than allocating space on the stack for a temporary, and using a high-level language, which are untenable since that space would be freed when the scope of the temporary variable ended. This is called the "Variable Length Arrays" feature of C89, and it's been around in a much lighter form in C99 for a while. There are many other similar constructions in C89; for example, "designated initializers" for int, which can be expressed thusly: int d[10]; //... int  $d[3] = \{0, 1, 2\}$ ; //... int  $d[5] = \{1, 2, 3, 4, 5\}$ ; This is an initialization, not an assignment, and can therefore be guaranteed to be optimizable by the compiler. A: It is an optimization provided by the compiler. It is not standard. Note, that: int a[3] = { 1, 2, 3 }; isn't valid for some compilers (i.e. gcc). A: This enables the compiler to optimize storage for (P 1, P 2,
