Your messages, chats and other Facebook content are only available for friends to read and comment on. If you want to keep an eye on those messages, you can open your Messages page. Click the message you want to see and then click the "Home" icon at the top of the page. You can also add more friends to an existing group or create a group that everyone in the group can see. This can be great for keeping an eye on your messages. To turn off who can see messages for a particular group, see How do I stop posts from showing up on my wall? Click the "Visibility" icon in the top left corner of your Facebook page. When it opens, click "Private" under Your Visibility Settings. That'll change your privacy setting to "Private" instead of "Everyone." Do you experience a dependency of salary on the popularity of your skills? - perfenomenon ===== jfarmer Yes, though I'd argue that the popularity of my skills as a software developer has more to do with my overall skill as a developer than with the skills I use them for. I've always assumed that it was the other way around. That means if you have a skill that's good for lots of things, it might not matter so much that it's a popular skill. ----- jfarmer I think I'd argue against it too. I think one's salary should be tied to how much value you add to the company (i.e. what you create). If it's hard for me to predict my next paycheck without seeing a list of what I'm going to create in the next 6 months, then I'm probably getting paid too little. I've noticed that the biggest source of variability in my paycheck is whether or not I'm going to make a game or webapp in the next 6 months. ~~~ jamesbritt "I think one's salary should be tied to how much value you add to the company (i.e. what you create)." _ If your job is to build software and you make those software things more valuable
