Deckbuilding can make a game even more fun and challenging, especially if it involves you expanding the game world in a meaningful way. Deckbuilding is pretty easy to implement in a game, but it may take a bit of design to make it enjoyable. In this post we are going to walk through a few ways you can implement deckbuilding in your games. To help us, let's look at some games that use deckbuilding to make their gameplay enjoyable.Yoot The game is a combination of classic Snake with deckbuilding mechanics. The action is played on a plane, and you use the power of your deck to move around the plane. Here's what it looks like in action: The ideas for Yoot came from Rune Wars, where the game was designed to be more social and deckbuilding was key to the game. I was lucky enough to meet the developer of the game Chris Taylor at the PlayGound Brighton conference this year. I talked to him about his work and they had a lot of ideas for Yoot, including the idea for the single player campaign.Yoot has three modes of play, which can be played individually or in teams. Sounds exciting, doesn't it? Well, to start with, it's a lot of fun! The gameplay is based on quick thinking and bluffing. You know which vampire rules over your card, and the vampires do everything in their power to kill you and your entire family! You can play with friends on up to 5 players, and it's easy to set up and play. Here's a look at the basic mechanics. You draw and play a card. If you are able to deal more damage to a vampire than the vampire's kill threshold, you win. If the vampire has more kill points than you, you die! If you don't control a vampire, you must draw until you do. Do you see how this plays into bluffing and quick thinking? In fact, one of the key components of the game is the game map that shows the order of play and how cards interact. The game isn't over when you die, and you can always leave your vampire's home. This gives you the opportunity to see what happens after you've been eliminated. You can also attack other vampires, and this can lead to amazing
