Away from human contact, we leave the physical world and venture into this ethereal place of hurtling particles, floating beaches, and a glass sky. The pause button becomes a tool of contemplation, time becoming a concept we can pin down, a border to delineate the present from the past. This game is an attempt to create something of the same intense experience. The denizens of the derelict town of Misty Lake have evolved a natural rhythm for repose – a present tense of their own creating, and we follow that as closely as we can. Misty Lake is a first person adventure game where you must explore the abandoned town in search of clues to find out what happened here 40 years ago. You play as a man named Solva whose childhood friend, Evan, has disappeared. Solva's search for Evan takes him through the deserted town and you have to find Evan before he falls off the edge of the world. A game of survival, discovery and friendship, Misty Lake is a visual and musical wonder that will leave you breathless. Inspired by the ancient practice of glaucoma patients looking at a rotating image of a waterfall to rid themselves of the illness, Misty Lake is set in a dreamlike, abstract world where time has taken on a different sense than yours. Go on an adventure across different worlds and play as Solva, the main character who has to recover his best friend and a place he used to call home. Story: The best story I've read on Youtube comes to YouTube, and it comes in and out of the game, but it's alive and it's beautiful! It's worth checking out if you haven't already and I can't recommend it enough: • Video: I haven't played this myself but here's what Rock Paper Shotgun has to say about the story: "There's a game by a new American studio called 'Misty Lake' that claims to tell a story. You're a character in a game, but it's a multiple-choice JRPG of a story, and at no point does it get confusing. It's hard to put into words because the plot is so simple. You play as the eponymous character named Solva. One day, he's playing a game called 'Crash' and he loses it. He goes to the local diner called The Sweet Shop and picks up a job to clean the place.
