natural language processing (nlp) and translation are some of the hardest problems for computers to solve because of the many contextual and idiomatic elements of speech. this has historically required a native speaker of both the source and target language to perform a translation. the recently introduced neural-network based approach to machine translation has brought on unprecedented translation accuracy and fluency. as the leading global supplier of capsicum products to the food and beverage industry, kalsec has a long history of providing high-quality capsicum extracts. we have two growing locations in the u.s. to ensure the supply for our customers in case of fire, crop failure, or inclement weather. this vertical integration assures you about the growing conditions and quality of our chili peppers. we use a natural selection process on our seeds and work with a select group of farmers to grow these peppers. additionally, we can monitor the plants to ensure pesticides from our neighbors crops do not find their way into our extracts. we are then able to harvest in a way to not include those peppers in our processing. we all have seen overdubbed movies in which lips of the speaker dont line up with the audio. as we prepare subtitles, we could translate word for word, or phrase by phrase in perfect alignment with the original content. however, that would likely lead to inaccurate, incomplete, or out of context translations. this is because each language has differing syntax, word placement, idioms, and phrasing. also a translation doesnt necessarily result in the same number of words in each language, hence the out-of-sync lips problem.

natural language processing (nlp) and machine translation (mt) are both natural language processing techniques that help computers understand and interpret human language. nlp applies techniques that involve computational methods to make computers understand language. nlp has a long history, and many researchers have dedicated their lives to understanding how language works. as mentioned above, this subtitle is the result of a collaboration between amazon transcribe and the translation project. the translation project does not itself create subtitles (though it may provide translated subtitles to amazon transcribe if they are needed for a particular video or article), and has created and updated this translation. the subtitle contains the header , followed by the text of the subtitle. because the words are represented in english, and the translation has been edited to conform to some common style conventions, the subtitles may be a little different from a natural speech translation. this is the reason why subtitles for natural language translations usually have a lower quality and contain fewer words than those for english translations. the translation project's subtitles are available for review and comment in the subtitle sandbox. if you find any errors or problems, please submit a file with the problem to the subtitle sandbox.

when choosing a video, you can choose to have amazon transcribe try to match the subtitles to the video. to do this, enable the captions button in the get started section of the dashboard. then, enter the text of the subtitle into the text box in the dashboard and click the add text button. the video will be processed for subtitles, and you will be notified when the subtitles are ready. 5ec8ef588b
